

Name: Dorium Maldovar

Race: Near-Human

Sex: Male

Profession: Black Marketeer

Temporal Origin: The Maldovarium bar, 52nd Century

Attributes:

STR	Level IV	CHA	Level VI
END	Level IV	MNT	Level V
DEX	Level IV	ITN	Level IV

Combat Statistics:

AP:	7
Armed Combat,
Laser Pistol	Level IV
Stunner Pistol	Level V

Significant Skills:

	Level:
Administration	V
Environmental Suit Operations	IV
Gambling	VI
Medical Sciences,
Psychology	V
Military Sciences,
Ordinance Construction/Repair	IV
Small Unit Tactics	III
Trap Discovery	IV
Trap/Ordinance Disarmament	IV
Physical Sciences,
Computer Science	VI
Social Sciences,
Economics	VI
Law (Galactic)	III
Streetwise	VI
Technology,
Communication Systems	IV
Computer Systems	IV
Electronics	IV
Trivia,
Maldovarium Bar	VII
Vehicle Operation,
Ground Vehicles	IV
Verbal Interaction,
Haggling	VII
Negotiation/Diplomacy	V

The Maldovarium Bar

Appearance:

Height: Average

Build: Fat

Looks: Average

Apparent Age: Middle-Aged Adult

Actual Age: 50+

Recognition Handle: Blue skin, bald, fat man in oppulant robes.

Distinguishing Physical Characteristics:

Dorium Maldovar is a fat, blue skinned humanoid who likes to wear extravagant robes (well, at least until he got beheaded by the Headless Monks). Has a media chip embedded in his head.

Brief Personal History:

Birthplace: Unknown.

In 5145, after hearing that she was in search of time travel, Dorium met with River Song in the Maldovarium bar to offer her a Vortex manipulator that was “fresh off the wrist of a handsome Time Agent”. As payment, Song offered him a Callisto Pulse which could disarm Micro-explosives from up to twenty feet. When he enquired as to what kind of micro-explosives the pulse could disarm, she said the kind she had just put in his wine. He was forced to give her the Vortex Manipulator.

Dorium sold a Judoon’s brain that contained a security protocol to a trio of Headless Monks, receiving a bag of sentient money. As his customers left, he questioned their motives for kidnapping “the child” and told them not to provoke the the Doctor’s anger and rage.

Dorium was one of many people who owed the Doctor a debt and was summoned by him to help rescue Amy and her baby at Demon’s Run. He did not serve in a combat role, but hacked into the station’s computer and discovered that Melody Pond had ‘Human plus Time Lord’ DNA.

Dorium made a fatal mistake when he and the others were surrounded by the Headless Monks. He believed they were his friends and would not harm him. He approached them with open arms, but they swiftly decapitated him and added him to their ranks. His headless body was subsequently killed by the Doctor’s remaining allies in their fight against the monks.

The Doctor was told by the alien Gantok that Dorium had information about the Silence. The two went to the Seventh Transept, where all of the heads of those whom the monks had beheaded were stored. In a box was decapitated head of Dorium. Dorium told the Doctor that on the fields of Trenzalore, at the fall of the Eleventh, a question would be asked, a question that must never be answered. The Doctor took him aboard the TARDIS. Dorium tried to explain to the Doctor that he must die at some point. A phone call to a nursing home told him that his old friend, Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart, had passed away in his sleep. The Doctor decided to go to his death.

Later, a Headless Monk was seen walking with Dorium’s head to the Cave of Skulls. It was the Doctor, who had escaped his death though it had apparently still happened. As the Doctor left, Dorium warned him that Trenzalore and the Fall of the Eleventh were still waiting for him, and called after the Doctor the first question: “Doctor Who?”

Personality:

Motivations/Desires/Goals:

As a black marketeer, Dorium is driven by his greed. He is very rich and he enjoys the trappings that come with it. He isn’t beyond using more questionable methods to acquire the objects that he, or his clients, want. While Dorium may consort with criminals and other shady elements, he is a man of his word. As such, he is loyal to his friends. One of the things that Dorium is very fond of is sentient money. He particularly enjoy “the way it wriggles.”

Manner:

Dorium has a tendency to complain, which intensifies after his beheading. When he is not complaining, he can be quite jovial. His joking nature hides the shrewd businessman aspect of his character.