Personal Profile: Crownelius Caw originated from another dimension. His world (Earth-115) was dominated by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. During the cold war, the USSR experimented with animal modification and enhancement. It was the Soviet geneticist, Dr. Onanin Valentinovich Karazamov, who discovered how to successfully modify the genetics of animals and clone them. He was able to create functioning, living animal creatures that had the semblance of men (and women). This process became known as the Karazamov Procedure. The procedure was replicated across the USSR and her many satellite states. The USSR now had half men, half animal soldiers bred for war. It was with these mutants that the USSR was able to dominate the planet. The mutant animals were considered to be a disposable resource easily replaced by the next generation.

His initial confinement was in a small cage. He was called Subject 10321-C568. One of the scientists gave him the nickname of Rodion. Rodion barely had room to stretch out his wings, let alone fly. There were thousands of cages in multiple facilities across the world. The human scientists and handlers treated the mutant animals no better than caged, mindless beasts.

Then the training began. The mutant animals were trained as ruthless soldiers that followed any order given. Their loyalty were absolute. Their human scientists and handlers treated them without compassion or pity. Failure (either physically or mentally... like questioning orders) was punished by death. The Soviet scientists had the furnaces running day in and day out.

Rodion knew he had to escape this captivity. He had no desire to be a pawn of any human. He plotted an escape with three other mutant animals – Tikhon (a mutant rabbit), Arkadi (a mutant squirrel), and Orina (a female mutant crow). They took advantage of the facility's sloppy security and escaped their cages. As the four roamed the facility grounds, they ducked into an unknown lab to avoid being seen by approaching guards.

To their surprise, the lab that they entered was conducting dimensional travel research. The room began to spin as he and his comrades screamed with terror. The room dissolved and they found themselves floating in a multi-colour vortex. They were all still screaming, but there was no sound. Tikhon and Arkadi's silent screams were cut short as they were devoured by strange beasts that seem to prowl in the dimensional vortex.

Orina suddenly disappeared as a portal opened in front of her. Rodion tried to reach for her but he found himself falling through his own portal. He found himself on a different earth (Earth-008). He skulked around civilization for a while as he got his bearings on this new earth. Since he was on a new earth, he decided to give himself a new name – Crownelius Caw. His old name and the world that it came from were now dead to him. Crownelius soon allied himself with other dimensional displaced mutant animals (and one mutant human). Together they called themselves the Outcasts.
